'Difficulties' send Haig back to Buenos Aires

Substantial difficulties remained between Britain and Argentina over a peace-ful settlement of the Falk ful settlement of the Falk-lands crisis, Mr Alexander Haig, United States Secretary of State, said outside No 10 Downing Street last night. He said he was returning promptly to Buenos Aires after 11 hours of talks with Mrs Thatcher and other Cabinet ministers. Asked whether he was now more hopeful, he answered: "Not at all".

Mr Haig said: "This morning, upon arrival, I said I was bringing some ideas we had developed in Buenos Aires. Today we have had an opportunity to discuss these ideas in considerable desired. ideas in considerable detail with the Prime Minister and with her senior Cabinet. We made some progress in these discussions but a number of substantial difficulties remain so we shall be returning this evening to Buenos Aires as time is slipping away from us on this subject."

He was not prepared to discuss details of the negotiations.

Mr Francis Pym the Foreign Secretary said: "We have explored very carefully the ideas that Mr Haig brought here. There is no doubt that difficulties do still remain. We are both very anxious to resolve this problem by peaceful means and I think we are very grateful to Mr Haig for the trouble he has taken and the line he has taken to aid us and the whole world in this endeavour.

It is understood that Panama, one of the main backers of Argentina's decisions. Argentina's decision to use force to assert its claim over the islands, will not be as vocal should there be another meeting of the Security Council.

Peru hinted last week that it would come to Argentina's aid militarily if need be, but over the weekend it seemed to have changed its mind placing the emphasis instead on a peaceful rather than a military force.

General Galtieri apparently feels his gesture is more important than mere economic considerations because his view it would allow Britain to retain a direct, though admittedly tenuous

He suggested to Mr Haig that Argentine troops could be moved off the Falklands in a matter of days if the British fleet was ordered home. The islanders would run their own affairs through the constraints of public expenditure, and road building from the constraints of public expenditure, and road building from the constraints of public expenditure, and road building from the constraints of public expenditure, and road building from the constraints of public sector cash limits.

The dangers the union sees

The report predicts that: Strikes "in defence" of the services in which Nalgo members work, including those against returning nationalized areas to private hands, are likely to be unlawful under the new Act. Damaging splits between the leadership and rank and file might be caused by executive reluctance to call strikes because of liability for damages.
The strength of closed shops will diminish while prospects of creating new ones will become "virtual-

Provisions designed to rule out "union labour only" clauses from contracts will favour the use of private contractors on cost grounds and lead to poorer public service wages and conditions. Clauses allowing em-ployers to dismiss selectively with due warning workers who strike "is bound to weaken and undermine all strike action. It also says that by tightening the definition of a trade dispute in earlier legislation Mr Norman Tebbit, the present Secretary of State for Employment, has severely hampered Nalgo's power to take the sort of action in the defence of jobs that the union has called in the past.

The bulletin warns activists against underestimating the damaging implications of the damag take legal advice every time it is asked to authorize a strike and adds: "If the committee saw the protection of union funds as its primary. duty it would tend to author ize requests for industrial action on very rare occasions indeed".

New hope of avoiding rejection

It may be possible to prevent the rejection of transplanted organs by exposing them to high concentration of oxygen after removal from the donor but before transplanted. tation to the host. That is the conclusion of a study that shows that the rejec-tion of an organ takes place in two steps.
Successful organ transplantation from one unre-lated individual to another is hampered by the prob-lem of rejection. Little is yet known about how the host are triggered to attack and reject transplanted organs, but Dr. David Vesole, Dr Gladys Dart, and Dr David Talmage on thyroid gland translants in mice occurs in two distinct stages and that the critical first step occurs at a site away from the graft.

leagues found that the host's white cells were first alerted to the presence of foreign tissue. That was not caused by the tissue itself but by passenger cells found within it, most of which were white blood cells. The recognition of those cells initiates the second stage of events, which leads to the destruction of the graft.

By culturing the thyroid tissue in the laboratory gen and increased pressure for one to two days before and his colleagues were able selectively to kill the passenger white blood cells responsible for the first stage of rejection. Instead of being rejected, most thyroid grafts then become established as stable grafts. This delicate balance in favour of their acceptance, however, could easily be tipped towards rejection. This happened when mice with staple thyroic transplants were injected with activated white blood cells from the spleen of another mouse suggesting that the grafts escaped rejection only because they had no

Dr. Vesole and his collesgues therefore believe that rejection begins when the graft's passenger cells migrate to the spleen of lymph node to be con-fronted by the host's white cells. Maryland is a fine place to live.

The state has the highest ownership of sailing boats per capita in the entire USA.

Which is probably why we also have the highest concentration of engineers, scientists and skilled technicians of any State in the country and perhaps the world.

But, most important, Maryland is unashamedly «pro-business».

We want to attract new enterprise, new industries, new initiatives.

Every Marylander will welcome you. You will not be the first to try it; already more than 100 European

The captains of Invincible and the other aircraft carrier Hermes held a council of war last week but this latest meeting will include com-manders of the other frigates and vessels in the task force.

Reviewing the situation,
one high-ranking officer said: "The programme continues this week with more advanced and more coordinated exercises between the various ships. As each day goes by these efforts are more coordinated." Among the scheduled exercises are feigned attacks by the carriers on one another and these may well now include defensive operations by the missile-carrying frigates.

Unconfirmed reports on the BBC radio news of signs of a diplomatic solution to the crisis were meanwhile greeted with some scepticism and a "wait and see" attitude. "I'm cautiously opti-mistic," the officer said.
"But as far as we are concerned, we press on and continue preparing for what-ever the Government wants us to do."

Preparations on board the Invincible on Easter Monday against attack were the most intense since the anti-submarine carrier left Por-tsmouth over a week ago. Preparing the ship to withstand attack as best as possible is treated extremely seriously and one senior officer added: "There are many documented inci-dents of ships which didn't get it right and sank as a consequence, and here are others which got it right and were saved. The programme has been quite excellent. The flying has come together extremely well. They've pulled their act together and indeed advanced in their state

He said that flying off the old type of carriers had been an especially "nerve-racking and high-tension business".

Mediation by UN more likely

By Our Foreign Staff

As politicians and diplomats continue to feel their way towards a Falklands settlement, the possibility of a United Nations role in an eventual solution appeared to increase yesterday. Señor Javier Pèrez de Cuellar, the United Nations

Secretary-General, was due back in New York last night after a telephone appeal early on Sunday from Mr Alexand-er Haig, the American Sec-retary of State. Mr Haig called from Buenos Aires before leaving for London.

Senor Perez de Cuellar said that if Mr Haig's diplomacy failed, "I hope we will find other ways. The United Nations has many ways of acting." He did not spell out any specific proposals but it is possible that United Nations peacekeeping role might be needed in the Falklands as part of a settlement.

Señor Prez de Cuellar's reticence was reflected among most United Nations members, who are reluctant to put forth proposals while Mr Haig's mission continues. One exception is Peru, which has urged an immediate truce of 72 hours by both Britain and Argentina to allow breathing space for a settle-

Yesterday President José Lopez Portillo of Mexico who supports the Argentine claim to the islands but opposes the use of force in settling international disputes what-ever grounds were given to justify it", said that Argentina has a right to "decolonize" the islands".

He proposed a settlement in line with the law". Senor Lopez Portillo was referring to a United Nations resolution of 1965 which, he said, ution of 1965 which, he said, recognized "the right of the Argentine Republic to deciolonize the Malvinas Islands (Falklands)". However, the (Falklands) also upholds the resolution also upholds the islanders' right to a decisive voice in this issue.

Britain's drink problem and the rivals who think they can cure it, by Caroline Moorehead

O Do you start drinking earlier and earlier each day?
Do you find that you drink embarrassingly quickly and have finished your drink long before those around you? around you?

It is now thought that there are 600,000 dependent drinkers in Britain alone with a further million to 1.2m with serious drinking prob-lems. The consumption of drink has in fact risen so dramatically throughout the world in the past 10 years that some doctors now speak of alcoholism as an epidemic, possibly even a cyclical one which, according to one analysis, is likely to peak in 1990. No one knows why the world has turned to drink: certainly the relative drop in cost of alcohol plays an enormous part, but so, say the experts, has advertising, extended licensing laws and the availability of alcohol in

Some aspects of modern alcoholism are particularly striking. Where can an alcoholic go? As recently as 15 years ago a vices, running alongside and patient with a serious drink, treated by them with a ing problem would be offered mixture of awe and disrean in-patient bed in which to dry out. If he refused to take it he was considered "insufficlently motivated" and shown the door. Since then, partly because because of the influence of American research, and the feeling that six weeks in hospital does not teach people to cope with their normal lives sober (and turns them instead into "treatment junkies"), the emphasis has now swung towards skilled out-patient day care.

Here an alcoholic (the word alcoholism has in fact largely been abandoned in favour of the less periorative sounding "alcohol misuse" "dependency") is not merely helped to give up drink but undergoes a wide and supportive treatment of psychotheraphy, designed to teach him to live without depending on drink. Heavy drinking, say the experts, cannot be viewed on its own:

He is not helped by the inherently hidden nature of the problem in that al-coholics are extremely loathe to declare themselves such until the point of no return has been passed.

Whether or not as some A octors suggest, the epidemic is slowing down, vast efforts are now beginning to be made to check it. In France, there is a stylish advertising campaign promoting the beauties of a healthy, drink - free, life, and in New York today the smartest drink is

The 'story did not seem extraordinary, presumably because Thompson signally failed to piece it together.

Like many great artists (though not necessarily all), El Greco got more interesting as he got older. The very earliest paintings in the Prado show are in fact quite unremarkable — even the first. Even when we get up to a painting as skilful as the Mary Magdalen in Penitence of 1580-85, which is already recognizable as an El Greco in its vertical elongation and its boldly expressionistic background, there is still something conventionally saccharine about the face and the attitude.

But by this time he had settled in Toledo. To judge by the numerous works of Juan Correa de Vivar, the most important figure of the previous generation of Toledo painters, showing in the Toledo exhibition, it cannot have been much of a challenge: Correa is a perfectly respectable painter, but though he died in 1566 he could be a full century earlier than even early El Greco in style. "The art of Frida Kahlo is a ribbon around a bomb", summed up Andre Breton after visiting her in Mexico in 1938. The bomb contained passion, pride and intolerable pain, and the bright ribbon was painted with an unperving intensity. While her husband, Diego Rivera, developed his celebrated murals depicting the entire history of Mexico, Frida Kahlo exposed her interior life and made

In his article in The Times on April 8, Ronald Butt laid two Charges against the Foreign Office. The first was that in foreign policy over the years officials had deliberately dis-carded morality in favour of expediency; the second, that they had conditioned successive foreign secretaries to neglect the relationship between diplomacy and defence.

On the first of these accusations, where is his evidence? If I remember correctly, it was the Foreign Office officials Vansittart and Wigram who were identified as arguing most forcibly against conciliation of the dictators Hitler and Mussoli-

At the time of the Suez operation, it was widely known that many officials argued that to proceed with the kind of military plan which was pro-posed would leave a moral stigma on Britain.
Foreign Office officials have often been labelled pro-Arab and anti-Israel, but I have never known one who did not insist upon the inviolability of the State of Israel. So it is with South Africa. If arguments of expediency had prevailed, the Royal Navy would still be in Simonstown, and 3,000 miles nearer the Falkland Islands, but those considerations were rejected in favour of sustaining a Within my recollection the task was given to the Foreign Office officials to prepare with their opposite numbers from overseas the draft to be embodied in the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference. Against much opposition, they insisted that it should contain (1) acceptance by the signatories of human rights and (2) inclusion of that rule in the Charter of the United Nations which insists on non-interference by one country in the internal affairs of an-

In international affairs, where there are so many motes and beams, it is not always easy to detect a moral content, but historically it is impossible to sustain the charge that Foreign Office officials never admit that there is a point beyond which diplomacy cannot go and other means have to be employed.

That is certainly true of the Falkland Islands dispute. No one will doubt that the Foreign Office was right to try for a negotiated settlement. Equally all must concede that the moral test which any particular proposal had to pass was that it must be acceptable to the Falkland islanders. That condition was strictly preserved by all Foreign Office officials and ministers. At that point, to borrow Mr Butt's phrase, "the Foreign Office dug in its toes".

As to the solutions which were canvassed, namely condominium or a lease-back of sovereignty, they cannot in themselves have been reprehensible as they are virtually the

to back diplomacy. No two situations with which the Foreign Office is called to deal are alike, and few, if any, of the solutions to the deadlock are plain. There are bound to be what Dr Runcie lately called "ethical ambiguities" in free

If, for example, the purely moral test was to be applied, there would be a strong case for ejecting the Soviet Union from the United Nations for breaching the Charter. It could come to that, but so far there has been a majority among the democracies in fayour of trying all reason-able means to wean her away from her practice of subversion and the use of force in support of political aims to a more relationship. constructive Democracies deal in conciliation and only as a last resort with

The failure in the case of the Falklands was not that diplo-macy was tried and tried again but that an error was made (in which others were concerned as well as the Foreign Office) as to the degree of visible force which could have deterred the dictator bent on an operation of snatch and grab. That was not a moral, but a military calculation. It was for that misjudgment in this particular case that Lord Carrington and others paid the

One lesson has been reinforced, that dictators never play by the rules which democracies observe. Doubtless Mr Butt will not begrudge the Foreign Office the very substantial diplomatic achievements which have occurred in recent days. To have mobilized the Security Council, the European Community, influential members of the Commonwealth and the United States on Britain's side shows that there is still influence and authority in British diplomacy
One further thought strikes me. In a free society, no one and nothing should be cocooned against criticism, but scrupulous against criticism, but scrupulous care should be taken to select, where possible, the politicians rather than the officials. The former can answer back, the latter cannot; and if their case goes by default, the morale of their service can sink.

I recall in this context a conversation with Mr Gromyko, the Soviet Foreign Minister, on the Soviet Foreign Minister, on the merits of sporting guns. After a time, Mrs Gromyko chipped in and said: "If you buy a gun for my son, buy a better gun than you do for my bushand for my son a learn than the said of the my bushand for my son all and the said of the the said husband, for my son allows the ducks to rise off the water".

Officials are sitting ducks. With any future shot Mr Butt may fire, I hope his target will be the politician and his model the younger of the Gromykos. © Times Newspapers Limited, 1982.

Iraqis in Parandak camp: obeisance to the Ayatollah

In the camp where they learn to love Khomeini

by Robert Fisk

Parandak POW Camp, North-

The Iraqi prisoners sat crosslegged on the windy parade ground, many of them with new, well-trimmed beards, all near gratitude at their prison guards. They sat in lines a quarter mile deep—all 14,000 of them—awed by the enormity of their surrender; when Iran's Army Chief of Staff, grey-haired and be-spectacled, almost avuncular, sold them of Iran's supposedly moral iniquities, the Iraqis roared back: "Down with Saddam Hussein."

It was not brainwashing in the normally accepted use of the term. It was scarcely indoctrination. But there could be no doubt what the Iranians are trying to do at Parandak, to make Saddam Hussein's own soldiers more dangerous to his Baathist regime than the Iranian army which is fighting its way towards the Iraqi frontier. When Khomeini's name was mentioned, it echoed over the massive parade ground, re-peated by the thousands of Iraqi soldiers who then knelt in prayer and homage to the Islamic faith which over-threw the Shah.

True, there were some dissidents among the Iraqi troops, men who still retained their political as well as their national identity. At the far back of one line of new, well-trimmed beards, all older prisoners—captives of them wearing around their necks a coloured portrait of Ayatollah Ebomeini. Have you ever wished you were better informed? When Nigel Lawson sacked Glyn England as chairman of the Central Elec-tricity Generating Board earlier this month one of the reasons given was that the CEGB had not given enough information to officials at the Department of Energy. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report in May 1981 noted that the CEGB's 1980-81 development review, "hitherto regarded as an internal document" had been made available too late to be taken into account.

The Studio Club, founded by Augustus John, Jacob Epstein and others in 1917 and a famous venue for jam sessions of jazz music in the 1950s and '60s, is to reopen after a 15-year closure. Alan Clare, who will be returning as resident pianist, tells me the artists' club had become pretty decrepit when he first went to play there. "There were notices up saying members must pay their subscriptions if the club was to continue, the floorboards were unsafe and the piano was must last much more than 2% hours for fear of overtaxing the

> If Mr Husain falls, what next? That is the question being anxiously asked in other Arab capitals west and south of Baghdad. Could the humiliated Iraqi army stabi-lize the situation and end the war, or would it simply open the way to an Islamic republic, Iranian style, dominated by the Shiite mujtahids of Najaf and Karbala? And would the contagion stop there, or would it spread to Kuwait, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates, and the east-ern province of Saudi Arabia all areas where Shi'ism, like oil, is a subterranean

King Husain of Jordan is worried, -too. He must be wondering now if he made the right decision when he switched sides in the Syrian-Iraqi quarrel in the late 1970s. At the time Iraq seemed to have a good deal more to offer, but now his namesake's friendship is becoming some-thing of a liability. Yet it is too late to go back. The "Shah of Jordan" (as the Iranians call him), whose name is stamped on the crates of ammunition captured with the Iraqi forces in Dezful, has no hope of making friends with the revolutionary rulers of Iran. Nor could he hope to gain anything from further upheavals in the Gulf. He and his fellow monarchs have to close ranks against the revolutionary tide, and hope that a concerted Arab drive, has now been specially asked by Iraq to help prepare the non-aligned summit to be held in Baghdad in September.

Should the West join in this general rallying of pro-West-eru Arab states behind Iraq? The answer must surely be no. Mr Saddam Husain is a sanguinary dictator, not worth saving in himself, and any attempt to save him may aggravate our problems with a successor regime. Besides, the Middle East has already suffered too much from Western meddling; which has seldom produced the results that Western leaders hoped for. It is time we stopped trying to play Arab politics and concentrated instead on helping moderate Arabs to reach a solution of the one Middle Bastern problem the West cannot escape responsibility for - the problem of Palestine.

As for Iran, we should all devoutly wish its deliverance from its present barbaric regime. But it is far from certain that that will be achieved quickest by helping Iraq to carry on fighting. At present, Iran's potential Bonapartes are presumably busy at the front. It is when they return in triumph that the mullahs should watch out.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A longer view on Middle East oil

From Mr A. R. K. Mackenzie Sir, Few people would deny that it is important to have a coherent strategy for such a vital area as the Middle East; nor that such a strategy means that our political cultural and economic politics should all be moving in the same direction. But are they?

On the one hand, we go to consider pains to improve our political relations in the area and to counter such follies as Death of a Princess. Yet as soon as oil prices fall we apparently lose all-interest in agreements with the chief oil producers and say, as did your distinguished contributor [Mr Christopher Johnson] on April 6, "Let us make hay while the sun shines." the sun shines."

Surely this is very short-sighted? As your contributor acknowledged, either world economic recovery or the next Middle East crisis could trigger off a new oil price rise very rapidly. Can it therefore be in our interest to undercut or alienate Sheikh Yamani? Are we likely to get someone better in his place?

In raising such questions one has no intention of appeasing Opec. Nor does one ignore the short-term stocking problems of the oil companies. Yet one should surely also bear in mind that the oil producers must now be in a more accommodating frame of mind; and that we badly need

It would therefore seem to me that, instead of simply making Opec sweat, there is urgent need for high-level discussions with Opec countries (especially those in the Gulf), and also between the oil companies and our own Government, to make sure that short-term economic decisions are consistent with our overall

From Professor H. W. Singer

Sir, Some of us have been advocating in The Times and elsewhere a "global bargain" with Opec. Two key elements of this bargain would be an offer to Opec of inflation-proof invest-ments for their surpluses in exchange for a reduction in oil prices for the poorer developing countries. May I now point out that, in the recent Budget, we have offered Opec quite uncondi-tionally and unilaterally inflationproof investments for their surpluses through the new indexed gilts which will soon be freely available to all investors, including Opec. Thus what has been advocated as a bargain with Opec has now turned out to be a

Is it too late to discuss with Is it too late to discuss with Opec a counterpart to this unilateral concession? At the moment obviously this concession is only made by the United Kingdom but, if it results in a large diversion of Opec funds to London, one imagines that it may not be long until other countries offer similar facilities to Opec on an equally unilateral to Opec on an equally unlisteral and unconditional basis. Then the chance of using this concession as a basis of a broader bargain with Opec would have been lost. . It may be thought that at this very moment, when oil prices are on the slide and Opec is in some disarray, the need for a global bargain has disappeared. I believe, however, that this would be a very shortsighted view.

Resident's account of Falklands action

From Captain E. P. Carlisle

Sir, May I refer to your report from Christopher Thomas on April 10 and the letter of Mr Rex Hunt, in your paper today (April I returned to Britain

Saturday under the protection of the Swiss Diplomatic Corps as, after freely leaving the Falkland Islands on Thursday, I had been subjected to six hours of intensive questioning and a minute search of my person and all belongings and papers by the Argentinian security services at both Comodoro Rivadavia and Buenos Aires. My reasons for returning to this country were that I believed that I could give valuable information to the Foreign Office and Ministry of Defence about conditions and the situation of the islands and the up-to-date opinions of the inhabi-tants, which would help defuse the present situation and reduce the possibility of war between Argentina and Great Britain.

Since my arrival my views and motives have been widely misrep-resented and there has been a deliberate attempt to discredit

After many years of patient and inconclusive diplomatic ex-changes and to distract attention from their troubles at home the Argentine military Government invaded the islands. In my view the correct action would have en to surrender the garrison in the face of force majeure to save expected loss of life.

The Governor chose to declare a state of emergency, confine the population to their homes on pain of arrest, and mobilise the local defence force of about 30 men and about 60 Royal Marines. A battle took place for about an hour in which some thousands of rounds of small arms fire were expended, whereupon a truce was arranged and the Governor surrendered.

There were no British casualties and practically no damage done to Government House around which the action took place. One Argentine soldier was killed (there has been one and, it is believed, one injured.

population to take a hand in the defence of their homeland. It is my opinion that if the defence had been conducted with determi-nation the invaders might well have been defeated. We have instead suffered a military humiliation similar to that suffered in 1807, as referred to by Mr Robert Dashwood in his letter to you published on April 10.

It must be admitted that the Argentines had been ordered to behave with remarkable restraint to avoid inflicting casualties and, since their occupation, have created a good impression with the inhabitants by their correct and friendly artitude. Argentina must be compelled to withdraw her troops; but unless a settlement is offered, conferring sovereignty to Argentina yet enabling the islanders to continue management of their own affairs, police and local government, their pride will demand that they fight.

War between our two nations,
War between our two nations,

with the inevitable likelihood of escalation and considering the situation of 30,000 British residents in Argentina, is too appalling to contemplate and can achieve no possible good. The islanders, though delightful people, are in many ways 50 years out of date. Progress had stagnated and Argentina promises investment and cooperation which the more thoughtful would welcome. Some will certainly choose to leave and Argentina has offered compen-sation, but if the islands are returned to British rule the previous unsatisfactory situation will be perpetuated with the insecurities remaining. The vital air services are likely to be removed and the possibility of friendly co-operation will be lost.

We have to achieve right not revenge and I am convinced that the opinion of the islanders is asked the majority would now accept such a magnanimous gesture of transfer of sovereignty under the safeguards mentioned above. The suspected oil resources can also be developed jointly by Argentina and Great Britain. There is immense good will in Argentina towards this country. I trust we will not throw it all away.

In historic reality, this is no new attitude. A number of these responsibilities remain; the smaller they are, the harder so often to resolve.

Parliament well knows that under successive governments efforts have been continually made to resolve them through diplomatic, UN and other chan-nels always within the wishes of the local inhabitants and the requirements of human rights which were the hallmark of British administration. Geological disposal of nuclear waste

From Dr T. J. G. Francis Sir. May I correct some misconception about the dumping of radioactive waste in the oceans put forward by your correspondent, Mr Dawson (April 2)?

Work carried out from the research vessel Farnella by scientists of this institute did indeed include surveys of possible disposal sites for radioactive waste, correctly reported by your Science Editor on March 30. This work was part of a larger programme of feasibility studies into the oceanic disposal of highlevel radioactive waste (HLRW) being carried out by this institute under contract to the Department of the Envisonment. Similar work is being conducted by the USA, France, the Netherlands, Canada and Japan and is co-ordinated internationally through the Seabed Working Group of the Nuclear Energy Agency of the

In citing the antiquity of many navigational charts still in use, Mr Dawson draws attention to one of the problems facing oceanographers engaged in such feasibility studies — the sparsity of data relating to many areas of the ocean floor. An appropriate part of the early phase of this research, therefore, is to produce high-quality maps of areas deemed worthy of further study. The equipment used in making such maps includes a range of acoustic instruments (echo soun-ders, seismic profiling apparatus, scan sonar) which not only tell us about the morphology of the seabed but provide infor-mation on the nature and thickness of the sediments. This was the type of work being carried out on r. v. Farnella.

Mr Dawson is wrong, however, in considering that the com-plexity of water motions within the world's oceans negates our efforts. The reason why the oceanic option for HLRW disposal is still worth pursuing is because its effectiveness depends far less on the properties of the water masses than on those of the sediments beneath. The most plausible form that such disposal might take involves the burial of waste canisters some tens of metres beneath the sea effectiveness of method depends on the effective-ness of the sedimentary barrier between the waste and the sea itself. Thus oceanic disposal of HLRW is, in fact, a form of geological disposal, analogous to methods of disposal on land being explored in a number of countries. Since most of world's surface is covered by ocean, the feasibility of geological disposal cannot be properly evaluated without including marine geology. In conclusion, radioactive waste exists. Safe methods of storing or disposing of it need to be found. Burial within the nts of the d is a disposal option which we would be foolish to ignore and which could yet prove to be the optimun method of containing

this dangerous material. Yours faithfully, T. J. G. FRANCIS, Head of Geophysics, Institute of Oceanographic

Sciences, Brook Road, Wormley, Goldaming, Surrey.

From the President of the Royal College of Psychiatrists Sir, Your admirable leader (Limits of compulsory treatment, March 31) rightly singles out consent to treatment as a crucial consent to treatment as a crucial issue in the Mental Health (Amendment) Bill. Although many aspects of the Bill have found favour with The Royal College of Psychiatrists, members are seriously worried by the inclusion of medication in Clause 41. Except in an emergency, it will be necessary, where a detained patient refuses tablets or injections, to obtain a second psychiatric opinion from a doctor nominated by the new Mental Health Act Commission. This will apply to medicines designed to induce sleep; to tranquillise agitated patients who may be confused, hallucinated or deluded; to combat severe de-pression with its associated suicidal impulses and self-neglect.

Practising psychiatrists can envisage many situations where the new requirements will generate inordinate delay in bringing relief to disturbed and distraught patients. Provisional estimates indicate that the need for second opinions under the medication stipulations will be very consider-able and will make substantial demands on psychiatric man-

As for the teachers, who for the most part have been protected successfully from redundancies, they should bear in mind that money spent on salaries cannot be spent on other aspects of educational provision. These are matters which deserve close investigation when the Commons Select committee on education starts it hearings next week.

From Councillor Neville C. Goldrein Sir, I was interested, and concarned, to read Lady Simey's letter on the matter of police (April 1). There is no anomaly in Police authorities having two thirds of their members political and one third magistrates. The police involvement is with less police involvement is with law and order and so it is reasonable, and was so considered by the legislature, that a proportion of the input should be from quasi-judicial members, being magis-It is a fact that in Merseyside the dominant Labour Party in the original Metropolitan Council, up to 1977, originated the practice of treating the magistrates as part of the opposition when allocating the seats on the Police Committee. They did not, according to Lady Simey's assertion, follow an existing practice as the metropolitan counties were new and this was an opportunity to start with a clean sheet. The magistrate members are just as important as the political members and it is in no way essential that the controlling political party should have overall control of the police authority. Had this been the intention, then magistrate members could have been specifically stated in the Act to be non-voting. When my party held control, from 1977 until 1981, we adopted the practice of the 20 political Metropolitical between Old Hall State three political parties in Liverpool. accordance with their numbers April 1.

ou the council. The result of this was, in fact, that had the minority Labour and Liberal parties wished to vote with the magistrates against the controlling Conservatives we could have been outvoted — and indeed on one occasion we were. This was a chance we were prepared to take in the interests of preserving a democratic approach and to fulfil the intentions of Parliament. When the Labour Party resumed control in May, 1981, it immediately reverted to the original scheme so that whilst the conservatives have over 25 per cent of the members of the county council they only have three members on the Police Committee.

The magistrates were intro-duced, I am sure, to be a proper safeguard against the exercise of improper political interference. I do not suggest for one moment that politics should be banned from politing, but I firmly believe that the politic should not be pawns in the political game. The duty of the police authority is to preserve law and order and not to combine that with political advantage, or the support of political philosophies which are shared in many instances by only a minority of the population the police force serves. Sir, Readers perhaps have now earned respite from the less jolly aspects of the basy leech, Hirudo medicinalis. At least it should be spared confusion with its nasty but remote cousin of the *Haema-*dipsa family which so plagued our Burma forces.

What is today forgotten is the fame our chinical leech always fame our clinical leech always enjoyed as a weather prophet, as the insect is notoriously sensitive to the onset of barometric changes. As recently as 1897 this was noted by the Inner Temple's barrister-meteorologist George Chambers in his weather treatise, when the Victorian dedication to when the Victorian dedication to leeches was as fashionable as that to antimony pills-

Neolithic finds in Sardinia

Recent excavations and radio carbon dating assays have provided the first firm chronology for the prehistory of Sardinia, one of the largest islands in the western Mediterranean basin. Although Sardinia, one of the largest islands in the western Mediterranean basin. Although Sardinia, which is part of Italy, lies only a short distance from both the mainland and the French island of Corsica, its prehistory has remained comparatively obscure. The best known monuments are the stone towers known as nuraghi, and the island was a noted source of copper in Classical times.

The excavations at the cave of Grotta Filiestru, in the commune of Mara, near the west coast of Sardinia, were carried out in 1979 and 1980 by Dr David Trump of Cambridge University, and demonstrated a sequence of occupation beginning in the Neolithic and persisting to the Bronze age, with later sporadic use down to the present day.

The earliest phase of occupation yielded the bones of sheep, cattle and pig, indicating a herding economy similar to other cardial ware sites, and one which remained constant for centuries thereafter.

The excavations have also yielded more than 8,000 pottery fragments, 4,000 pieces of flaked flint and obsidian from the making and use of stone tools, and some 2,000 animal bones: this collection will enable the economy of prehistoric Sardinia to be studied with greater insight than hitherto, and the overall sequence is considered so important for the island's archaeology that an entire monolith of the deposits is to be lifted for display in the regional museum at

Job fears as oil rig orders decline

The value of orders from new North Sea oil develop-ments fell by more than 15 per cent last year, from £2,380m to less than £2,000m rigures to be published shortly by the Government are expected to show. Another decline is likely this year amid growing fears that hundreds of jobs. in the offshore construction industry will be less unless them. try will be lost unless there is an unexpected rise in demand.

The fall in the value of offshore orders reflects the drying up of new North Seafield developments in the present harsher climate of falling oil prices and what taling oil prices and what the oil companies claim is excessively high North Sea taxation. I wenty fields are in production, and another five are due on stream by 1984. But no new developments have been started in the last two years, and many com-panies are responsising their potentially economic oil finds.

Leading figures in the platform and module construction industries left Mr. Hamish Gray, the Minister in charge of North Sea oil at the Department of Energy in no doubt at an industry dinner last week of their gloomy outlook. One employer, Lewis Offshore, issued 90day statutory redundancy notices to its 400 workers at Stornoway in the Outer Hebrides last week, and other companies are expected to follow suit in the coming

The outlook is bleak, according to Mr George Maine, business development minager at William Press, and outgoing chairman of the Module Constructors Association. "There will be plenty of redundancies in the next few months, there seems little doubt about that".

Target for Sunday: that elusive reader in the middle

MARKETING AND ADVERTISING:

By Torin Douglas

The advertisement business would like to see this success recreated on a Sunday, not least because for many years there has been a monopoly in the middle of that market. Only one paper has been available to advertisers between the Sunday qualities and the populars (or the "haughties" and the "naughties" as the Mail on Sunday's advetising agency, Saatchi and Saatchi Garland Compton, has dubbed them in its trade advertising). That is the Sunday Express, which though highly successful-over many years is now felt by many advertisers to be unfashionable, with an aging count — for the first six weeks they can buy it for the same price as the Daily Mail —17p — a saving of 11p on the Sunday's cover price.

Within the first two weeks of the offer, over 150,000 Mail readers had put in their orders and John Winnington-Already advertisers have booked more than £2.25m of display advertising ingram, managing director, is confident that by the day with the paper, and of the launch the newspaper will have more than 300,000 that is without even Mail readers safely under its having seen a dummy issue > The rest of the £3m advertising and public rereadership. (In fact, the Sunday Express's readership profile is very similar to that of the Daily Mail, which only goes to show how advertisers are as susceptible to images as the rest of US.) as the rest of us.)

Most advertising agencies are confident that the Mail on Sunday will do well. "I'd be very surprised if it didn't do very well", says John Mallows, the media director of Yessus & Pubicam "The radio interviews

"The Daily Mail is a superb editorial product and we look that a new Sunday paper is to forward to that standard and style being carried across to the middle ground on Suntry, the launch of any major new publication is an event, but this particular paper has greater goodwill going for it than most. keeping his editorial product a firmly under wraps.

Since the paper's display revenue target is just £6m with a further £2m budgeted for classified revenue, the Mail on Sunday is already well on its way to profitability. However, there is all the difference in the world between winning advertising on trust for the early issues of a newspaper — all new publications can sell out their first issues, on curiosity value alone — and sustaining a regular income once that initial interest has died down.

initial interest has died down.

The Mail on Sunday is aiming for an initial circulation of 1.25 million, of which it would like 60 per cent to be in the ABC1 socioeconomic groups. It has based its advertising rates on this supposition and advertising agencies reckon that on these costings it offers a very attractive buy.

attractive buy.

Everything depends, however, on whether it can achieve this circulation and this is by no means certain. In the Mail on Sunday's favour is the fact that 9h million people never read a Sunday paper, and many of these read the Daily Mail during the week. The supposition is that if there were a paper they felt at home with on Sunday — ie. a Sunday version of the Mail — they would buy it.

On the other hand, rival newspaper publishers are by no means convinced that there really is room for an extra paper, either in reader-ship or in advertising terms. One problem in going for the middle ground, is the fact that the competition comes from all the other papers in the market, and not just one

For months, the other Sundays have been gearing themselves up for the launch of the new paper with, inevitably, the Sunday Express, as the paper which has most to lose, in the forefront. While the Mail on Sunday has said little about its editorial plans, the Express is quite open about its editorial strategy, which centres on its has been a success in even having seen a dummy quite open about its editorial production capacity has been anybody's terms since its issue since editor Shrimsley, strategy, which centres on its one of the new paper's relaunch as a tabloid in 1971. even at this late stage, is colour magazine, since this is biggest problems and Associ-feature the new paper A number of series are planned by the magazine, which has a new editor, Ron Hall, who formerly edited The Sunday Times Magazine. Foremost among these will be the serialization of Robert Lacey's biography of the Princess of Wales.

The magazine will also be used to give colour treatm to a number of big stories breaking this summer — the visits of the Pope and of President Reagan, the World Cup, the royal baby — and Express executives believe this will give them a real edge over the Mail.

Associated Newspapers thought long and hard about whether to launch a colour nagazine with the new paper. The only two Sunday news-papers to increase their circulation last year were the two that launched colour the News of the World.

the News of the World.

"We might launch one later," says Winnington-Ingram, "but so far we have not found a way of doing it economically. In addition to which, the other colour magazines were launched primarily as a way of boosting the circulation of their parent papers and we are parent papers and we are copy we can print without any need for that."

This is not such a reckless boast as it might seem. The fact is that finding sufficient ated is unlikely to be able to print more than 1½ million copies even if it wanted to. The reason is that for many years Associated News many years Associated Newspapers has printed the Sunday People on contract for Mirror Group Newspapers. It has now persuaded The People to move its production into a single building, leaving plant free for the Mail on Sunday, but it has been a real squeeze. For the first 13 weeks of the paper, when circulation is bound to be abnormally high as readers sample the new paper, it has sample the new paper, it has acquired extra capacity in

This will mean it can print up to 2 million copies if necessary, but only as a short-term measure.

Running out of copies, of course, is a problem most publishers would like to have but not everyone believes it is a problem that will affect the Mail on Sunday. "I think it may well have a difficult time" says Tony Gatward, associate media director of the Lintas agency.

"There seems to be a feeling that it may only get a reeing that it may only get a circulation of around 1 million, of which some 300,000 might be new purchasers, with 700,000 being syphoned away from the Sunday Express, the qualities and the populars.

Auction houses Hard lessons

The two quoted fine art auction houses finally came down to earth with a bump last week. Christies International announced a sharp fall in profits, and Sotheby Parke Bernet confirmed that it is, having major structural problems which will lead to a trading loss in the current year ending in August.
The reassessment of this racified sector of the stock market has come rather late in the day since it is only in the last few months that it has become apparent that the international fine art market was not as resilient as it had earlier looked. For most of its five year life as a publicly quoted company, Sotheby's standing has gone from strength to strength with all the strendant publicity sur-rounding the mega-sales— Mentimore Von Hirsch, the Henry Ford II impressionist

Henry Ford it impressionist collection, the Leonardo da Vinci Codex and so on.

The investment case, which pushed Sotheby's share price up from its 150p public launch to well over 500p before troubles set in, was based on London's dominance in the international market and the national market and the commanding position the two British names occupied in the market. In addition, in a period of rising inflation, the auction houses appeared to have a bhilt-in cushion with their common the second common with their common to the common common to the common income rising in line with the steady increase in art

At the same time the two houses seemed to be head-has for a big name in profits as the fruits of an aggres-sive overseas expansion started to ripes: And they habilitum daily problems, life labour disputes and working capital requirements with which manufacturing industry has had to grapple.

So what has gone wrong? For both the houses, one of their major headaches has been if not the collapse of the international art market at least a much quieter 1970s. By their very nature the big sales are lumpy and there have been none of the really big auctions which have helped profits in earlier years. That has forced both groups back to their bread and butter business at the medium and small end of the market at a time when increasing competition in the whole market has also led them into a commission war. The difficulties have been tes and Sotheby's have seent heavily to cash in on what they rightly identified at the time as a boom in the North American market. But for the past year high have pulled the rug from under this market

What has become apparent in the world's salerooms has been the marked emphasis of buyers on quality while there has still been a tendency for vendors to gum up the works by setting unrealistically high reserve prices.
On top of the problems in the whole market. Sotheby's has been afflicted by character defaults of its own. Last week's manage-ment changes underlined what has been apparent both inside and ourside the company, namely that the commercial voice has increasingly been pushed into the wilderness. That was fine while the chairman was a business-getter like Mr Peter Wilson, but with his retirement the group could no longer rely on getting an increasing market share.

chairman of Sotheby's. In the middle of a big expansion programme new salerooms in New York, growth in warehouse capacity and increasing staff numbers cost £13m in two years — Sotheby's suddenly found its costs and revenues lines running in opposite directions.

The question now is whether effective action has Sunderland moved off the bottom of the first division with a 2-0 win over Birmingham City, West scored the goals.

Nottingham Forest gained revenge for an early season defeat by neighbours County, winning the return at Meadow Lane. Bowyer gave them the lead, Christie equalized, only for a 19-year-old, Plunmer, to head an 83rd minute winner. It was the first time Forest had scored twice in a match since January 9. Geddis, deputizing for the Geddis, deputizing for the injured Shaw, proved his worth to Aston Villa, with two goals against Brighton. Evans was Villa's other scorer in a 3-0 win.

Luton Town increased their lead at the top of the second division, beating Norwich City with goals from Stein and Jennings. Nearest rivals Watford, had a Blissett "goal" disallowed, but earned a point on Queen's Park Rangars' artificial pitch, before more than 22,000 spectators.

A day when only tempers flared

Six goals from their two Easter matches may give the impression that Aston Villa are back to their form of last year, but this is far from the case. For most of their match against Brighton and Hove Albion at Vills Park vesterday they struggled to find cohesion against a ruggled defence and only two goals in the last five minuts relieved the long periods

It was a bad-tempered, niggly sort of game, in which two Brighton players, Nelson and McNab, were cautioned. Nelson was fortunate not to have conceded a penalty when he appeared to pull down Withe. Justice of a sort was seen to be done, however, when five min-utes later Withe dispossessed Nelson and crossed for Geddis to

The first came eight minutes into the second half, after an opening period when the two defences were very much on top. Foster got slightly the better of Withe in this period, but as the game wore on it was Withe who appeared better to heat Digweet rom close range. Up to this point Geddis hat hardly distinguished himself. Always active and extremely fast, his energies were largely wasted misdirected or (perhaps mor kindly) misunderstood by hi The third goal was made hard free-kick from the left touchline, and Evans dashed in to meet it with his head and leave Digweed groping.

How different it might all have been had Robinson scored for Brighton as early as the twentysixth minute. He chased after a perfect through bail from Grealish and drove hard at the goal. Not for the first time recently. Rimmer kept a clean sheet by marvellous anticipation and managed to smother the shot Apart from that, Brighton achieved little, but the final scoreline was decidedly harsh

Nottingham Forest avenged their 2-0 defeat at the City Ground in January with a narrow victory over Notts County at Meadow Lane in which they had to score twice — a rare sight this city rivals.

Up to that point the two sides were a perfect match in what amounted to a private battle before Meadow Lane's largest crowd of the season.

The weaknesses in both defences were cruelly exposed in an entertaining if at times fustrating first half. Roeber, who was given yards of space to play in, tormented the County defence of the opposition.

Wednesday's team can think as well as run

Though Newcastle scored first, Wednesday put together a re-covery operation which, although mainly based on a determination not to defiate the jolly holiday mood of their fans, still provided moments to suggest that the side can think as well as run.

Taylor, an irresistible force of a man, was probably their most influential player, and he personified many of their qualities too, boring forward relentlessly one minute, and the next, axchanging next, automatic passes. But he was run a close second by Megson, who has red hair and plays to it.

The collective effect was better than the one Newcaste could manage. They were competent, withhout being inspired. Waddle looked racy, occasionally, the luck, and what little he did have was usually disputed by the likes of Pickering. Newcastle's goal came in the Hillsborough, with its sunny, smiling stand, and ghostly echoes from World Cup games, begs for a first division side, and it might have one here. Manager Jack Charlton's blend of wizardry, energy; and pure grit was perhaps a length too good for preliminaries like finding their terms. But at first their response to the goal was anything but convincing, long balls bursting from the back in the hope that Curren and company might run onto them, which they failed to do. Then, in the 25th minute, Shelton equalized with a simple shot. The winner was a more involved affair just before halfinvolved afrair just before hair-time, five players helping the ball to Pearson, the scorer. And what remained was a ding-dong second half in which Wednesday might have scored again and kept falling to do.

The extra-hole town still talks about Stadler's green jacket

In this prety, flower-lined town in Georgia, which emjoys one week each year of world fame, the talk today was still of the manner of Graig Stadler's victory in the United States Masters championship, which ended last evening. Not, you understand, why the 28-year-old won his first green jacket, but how he did it.

After having an astonishing six-stroke lead over his nearest challenger with only nine holes remaining. Stadler found himself just one clear on the seventeenth tee. It is history now that he did not presserve this narrow lead, was forced into a playoff and won on the first extra hole. It was the second Playoff in three remaining, Stadler found himself just one clear on the seventeenth tee. It is history now that he did not preserve this narrow lead, was forced into a playoff and won on the first extra hole. It was the second Playoff in three years and the eighth in all.

The playoff, which had not seemed remotely likely until Stadler was two-thirds of his way around, brought an eventful tournament to a close. Yesterday afternoon Stadler led the field. He was no Johnny-come-lately: he had been used for the lead at halfway after rounds of 75 and 69 and his 67 on Saturday put him on 211, five under par. He led the field by three strokes.

Many people thought he would he went eagle, eagle, birdie, was the seventeenth of the permittimate round. For the remaining 24 holes he was 10 under par, including a dazzling period when he went eagle, eagle, birdie, was thirteenth of the permittimate round.

Britons at their best

By Athole Still

There were no medals for Britain yesterday on the fourth and final day of the Martin European: Diving Cup at Crystal Palace, but the presence of so many of the world's leading exponents from 1 nations inspired two Britons, Sandra Yeates and Nigel Stanton, to surpass every expectation.

Miss Yeates, aged 21 from Cheltenham, finished fifth in the 3m springboard and Stanton, aged 17, from Ware, came seventh in the 10m ligh board. Both divers showed admirable competitiveness as they mproved considerably on their previous bests in achieving qualifying standards for the world championship in Ecuador in August.

Miss Yeates was the British second string diver and had never exceeded 400 points for the 10-dive programme. Her score yesterday of 446.82 was the bighest over recorded by a British who finished alread of her.

Hull thundering up in a three-horse race By Keith Macklin

Two defeats in four days by Widnes have ruined the holiday for the League leaders and opened up a cliffhanger finish for the championship, sponsored by Slalom Lager. While Widnes were missing chances and losing 16-21 at home to St Helens, Hull continued their rampant form to win 46-3 at York. Leigh, level on points with Hull, two points behind Widnes, beat Warrington 30-18 and helped to set up the most fascinating championship three-horse finish.

Waterloo were soon 12 points down. Harrison opened the scoring with a blind side try following a fierce crash ball run by Barley. After Rawnsley had converted, Moran dropped a goal and Rawnsley kicked a penalty.

A brilliant side-stepping run by King for Waterloo was fittingly crowned by his try which Carfoot converted, but Moran's second drop goal made it 15-6 at the interval. Now Wakefield had to face the considerable wind with the issues still just in doubt, but it was not long so. Hay went off the issues still just in doubt, but it was not long so. Hay went off with a shoulder injury, his place in Waterloo's back row being taken by Taylor and after Rawnsley had kicked his second penalty, a cheeky interception by the speedy Harrison led to a try which stretched their lead to 22-6. Shuttleworth added a penalty to close Wakefield's scoring and in the closing stages Waterloo hammered away at the Wakefield line but could not even engineer a consolation try.

cruises Piggott

From Desmond Stoneham Paris, April 12

River Lady was the only horse to give Lester Piggott a winning ride at Longchamp this afternoon and she did so quire brilliantly in the one mile Prix de la Grotte. the one mile Prix de la Grotte.
Taking over the lead from her pacemaker, Pasadoble, two furlougs from the post. River Lady immediately accelerated clear of her rivals and was eased before defeating Exclusive Order by two and a half lengths with Typhoon Polly a further two lengths away, third.

Piggott described River Lady, the 10-6 favourite, as a really good filly who should stay further. The immediate plan is out her in the Poule d'Essai des Pouliches (French 1,000 Guineas) in early May before the longer Prix Sain-Alary and Prix de Diane de Revlon (French Oaks) at Diane de Kevion (French Oaks) at Chantilly in mid-June. A Fr 1.8m yearling at Deauville in 1980, River Lady is a half-sister to No Lute, who won last year's Prix Lupin, was disqualified from first place in the Prix Greffulhe and is now in training with Henry Cecil at Newmarket.

at Newmarket.
Rather backward in the paddock, Exclusive Order put up a fine performance to finish second cosidering she had not seen a racecourse since last September. Exclusive Order is known to like straight tracks and good ground so she will make her next appearance at Newmarket in the 1,000 Guineas. Last ket in the 1,000 Guineas. Last season, Exclusive Order beat the current second favourite for the 1,000 Guineas. Play It Safe, half a length in the Prix du Calvados at Deauville.

Cadoudal was a somewhat surprising 6-4 favourite for the Prix Greffulhe, which went to the 5-1 chance, Bois de Grace, who was ridden by Henri Samani. The colt battled throughout the final furlong with his stablemate

The colt battled throughout the final furlong with his stablemate Nabirpour, who was eventually beaten by a head.

Bois de Grace was carrying the colours of the Baron Guy de Rothschild to victory in the Greffulhe for the fourth time. The colt is now a likely runner for the one and a half mile Prix Hocquart in May when he will again meet Hadoudal.

How much fine art at auction

never reaches reserve? It's disappointing when you don't get the price you were hoping for.

Of course, there's always a chance you might exceed it.

But certainty is an important aspect when you're selling something you're selling something you'll get a fair and accurate valuation — and very often it's something we'll buy, immediate payment. No buyer's premium. And no uncertainty. Alternatively, we'll sell it on your behalf. And you can still be certain of a good deal. Can you afford not to go to Spink?

9.25 Plays for Tomorrow: Crimes by Caryl Churchill. Set in a personalised fall-out shelter in the year 2002 the story concerns the work of a prison psychiatrist dealing with a motley collection of wrongdoers at the same time having a crisis of conscience about his best triend. Starring T. P.
McKenna and Julia Foster.
10.25 Secretics of Conscience.

10.25 Snowdon on Camera. The first of two programmes with Lord Snowden talking to other photographers about their style (r). 11.03 News headlines.

11.05 Harry O starring David Janssen. The private detective helps Paul Sawyer, an architect with the habit of making enemies (r). 11.55 Weather.

and fourth places sees Doug Mountjoy, last years runner-up in the World Championship, playing former World Champion Cliff Thorburn. The match is introduced by Alan Weeks and the commentator is Ted Lower the commentator is Ted Lowe. 9.40 Fields of Play. In the fourth of five programmes about Play we hear about the role of the ball in our leisure pursuits.

Newsnight presented by Peter Snow, John Tusa and Donald MacCormick. The latest news from the Arts world is provided by Joan Bakewell and the inside stories in sport by David Icke and Marshall Lee. Ends at 9.00 Pot Black. The play-off for third and fourth places sees Doug Mountjoy, last years runner-up 9.00 The Brack Report. The second of a tenpart serial that cleverly looks at alternative methods of energy. After falling out with his employees in the Atomic Energy Authority, Brack turns to his mentor, former nuclear scientist, Max Chalten, for advice.

10.00 News. 10.30 The Human Raca, Part two of Desmond Morris's investigation into the races of the world. This evening he takes a look at our role of hunter.

11.30 Kaz. The former convict-turned-lawyer has to contend with withheld information and in his desperation to overcome this, falls into a trap.

• CRIMES (BBC 1.9.25pm) by Caryl Churchill begins a six week son of Plays for Tomorrow, each of which are set some time within the next thirty-odd years. For Crimes the year is 2002 and we are awaiting a nuclear holocaust. Dr Schwarz (T. P. personality regaling viewers with hints on surviving the impending McKenne) is a prison psychietrist living with his wife (Julia Foster) in their fall-out shelter. His video enables him to study his criminal about themselves at length. We have Jane (played convincingly by Svivestra Le Touze) an arson who murdered of her parents; Ron (Peter Whitbread) a lover of the countryside at odds with authority;

CHOICE shelter for the duration of the nuclear alert? A sombre play with the only light relief coming from Dave Hill as a television

HORACE (ITV 7.00pm) is a thirtyish Yorkshire man with the mental age of a six-year-old. He has recently been released from an institution and now lives with his mother in a rural Yorkshire town. He is diabetic and the buft of the local children's practical lokes. Not, on the face of it, a programme series. But Ray Mintor has successfully managed to write a series in which the retarded her is believable and his adventures not in the realms of fantasy (at least in the two episodes I have seen). He is helped by the acting of Barry Jackson who plays the part of Horaca with beguiling innocence.

SUNDAY OUTING (Radio 4 11.03am) casts the erstwhile Lady of the Manor, Penelope Keith, in the role of Elizabeth, the aging leading lady of a Canterbury rep. She decides to organize a day-brig to Whitstable for the company but when the time arrives only Michael, a sity young man on the threshold of his acting career, turns up. Undaunted, they press on to the seaside. Elizabeth trying to recapture the bliss of youth Michael captivated and unsure of himself. Matthew Solon's witty lines are played to perfection by both Miss Keith and Gary Cady.

Military preparations are being made for the arrival of the British Fleet. Argentine sources claimed that the runway at Port Stanley was long enough for Mirage jets to land and take off and further claimed that a number of the fighters were parked on the runway and ready for combat. The run-way was built by the Argentines under a contract with Britain in 1971 to provide a regular air link to Argentina. There is no confirmation of this claim.

· The · Junta refused to confirm today that it had withdrawn most of its military ships to safe areas in the South Atlantic in response to Britain's threat to sink any naval vessels found within a 200-mile radius of the Falk-own backbenchers.

One right-wing Conservative MP. Mr Anthony Marlow, member for Northampton, North, agreed that the wishes of the islanders should be a key to any settlement, as it had been during 15 years of negotiation.

Mr Marlow also said that the possibility of "lawing

the possibility of "lancing the boil" had raised his own the bon had raised in own hopes that a settled future for the islands may now open the way to a development of resources around the islands; something which had hitherto been blocked by the festering dispute with Argentina

Argentina:

Dr Owen said in his radio interview: "Presumably, if a United Nations peace keeping force were to be there at all, even a United Nations presence; they would have a flag, and if the British Governor were to be there, administering the islands on behalf of British flag. I suppose it is probably liveable with that some Argentinean, flag fless some Argentinean flag flies there as well." Dr Owen added, however

What I don't think any Government could accept is the Argentinean flag flying, because that would be an assumption that British sov-ereignty had been conceded, and we would not be prepared to do that.*

He said that a negotiated settlement was now "almost certain reality". The only danger was that Bitish public opinion should become more hawkish; more tough-minded than that of the islanders "I don't want the Falkland islanders conceding anything under duress", he explained. "But I do believe there is a sense of realism amongst the Falkland islanders: They are going to have to live in the Southern Atlantic, they are going to be dependent on Argentina for communications and many links. "I believe they are realistic enough to know that out of this is going to have to come some settled relationship etween the Falkland Islands and Argentina.
